WORDS OF INSPIRATION

The Land Of The Glens And The Fern

John Liddle Kelley

From this place where now I live,
how oft does my fancy flee,
on pinions of love and devotion,
dear home of my father, off to thee.

In this land of clement weather,
I sigh for one rugged and stern;
I long for the bloom of the heather,
in the land of the glens and fern.

Though here there is naught to remind me,
of the dark, misty land of my birth.
Not tears and not distance can blind me
to scenes that are the dearest on earth.

As I hear the bird's clear whistle,
I sigh, shall I ever return,
to the land of the heather and thistle,
to the land of glens and fern.

Though dear to my heart is England,
for the home of my childhood I yearn;
I dream, amid my memory's grandeur,
of a land that is misty and stern.

From this land of bordered gardens,
my thoughts to Scotland do turn;
to the purple mountain's grandeur,
to the land of the glens and the fern.
