WELCOME AND OPENING WORDS

POEM

by George Henry Grimes

He knew, the old man knew,
And with quiet dignity left.
The nodding flowers knew his way.
Nature is seldom left bereft,
For as softly as a sun rises,
Other suns sink down.
From winter's desolation
Will spring a summer's crown.
Flowers burst to blossom,
But the clematis upon the wall,
Nodding now in beauty,
Awaits the autumn fall.

This ancient way the old man knew,
He spurned man's hectic race,
From its false flowers turned away
And left with quiet grace.
