PARTING POEM

Last Journey

There is a train waiting at the station with a seat reserved just for me,
I'm excited about this journey as I've heard it sets you free.
The trials and tribulations, the pain and stress we breathe,
Don't exist where I am going, only peace and quiet, I believe.

For life has so many destinations, some are happy, some are sad,
And each one's a brief reminder of the travels that we've had.
Then one day you'll take your final journey, on the train, just like me
And others shall reflect upon your life and all that you did see.

They will talk about the places you went, the memories you leave behind,
Or the many passengers you rode with, whose life with yours was intertwined.
Until now you've shared my travels and now you'll wish me on my way,
For it's not a trip you can join in, it is not your time today.

Yet don't be sad to wave me off, as I now travel my final mile,
As the steam rises high into the sky, I shall ride off with a happy smile.
