POEM

The Path

A wooden fingerpost
Guides us.
And we shall go –
Along this brambly track,
By this gabbling water
And over stone stiles
Plodding miles
To reach those
Green remembered hills –
To hear grouse
Cackling in the heather,
To feel the fickle touch
Of northern weather –
Gentle or harsh
We shall go.

We shall walk
Where others went before
Plodding to the rhythm
Of our hearts
Lungs heaving.
Leaving
The other world behind –
That world of care
Where
It's easy to forget
These clouds
Scudding across these skies
These splendid sights
Before our eyes.

By dry stone walls
Where the curlew calls
Then down through wooded glen
And up again –
To see the light
Catching a faraway
Church spire
In a village
That we once knew.

Yes we shall go –
Hopefully
In tune with our boot steps
Following the way.
It is only
The path
My friend.
As it has no beginning
It has no end...
